

To the Permanent Representative

New York, 22 March 2014

Excellency,

World Water Day on March 22 is an important occasion to recall and celebrate the importance of water for our lives and for the planet we live on.

Water and its sustainable management are essential for human health and well-being, poverty eradication, food and energy production, social and economic development, for protecting and maintaining healthy ecosystems and for disaster risk reduction. But water is also a finite and vulnerable resource under mounting pressure from population growth, urbanization, pollution, unsustainable production and consumption patterns, and climate change.

With water challenges rapidly increasing, hindering future development and threatening current advances, complacency is not an option. A committed and forceful response is urgently needed. The deliberations on the post-2015 development agenda are our opportunity to pledge to a concrete and determined response.

On the occasion of World Water Day 2014, we therefore want to commit to a Sustainable Development Goal on water and sanitation. The water and sanitation SDG must be ambitious, with targets that take into account the unfinished business of the MDGs, as well as the emerging and future challenges. The document on the focus areas of sustainable development prepared by the Co-Chairs of the Open Working Group on Sustainable Development Goals for its ninth session earlier this month, as well as the discussions during the session itself, provide a solid basis for shaping the SDG on water and sanitation.

Being aware that many share the same vision, we encourage all Member States to support the elaboration and adoption of such a dedicated SDG on water and sanitation in the future discussions on the post-2015 development agenda in the Open Working Group, and beyond.

In thanking you in advance for your support in this process, we remain,

Sincerely yours
